

Why Malaysian Institutions are Emerging As the First Preference for Indian Students Seeking English-Speaking Degree Courses

9 January 2026

Have you observed that Indian students often discuss plans for further studies in Malaysia? What makes this country in Southeast Asia so attractive to those seeking to study in English without being pressured by cultural or academic differences? The key to this attractiveness of Malaysia to international students rests in how this country has designed its system to favor international students while maintaining simplicity.

Malaysia, over the years, has become one of the preferred destinations for “Study in Malaysia” candidates. Malaysian institutions are predominantly conducting their classes in English meaning that this serves to benefit Indian students who are receiving their education from an English medium educational system in India. Therefore, be it the classroom or the campus, communication is not a problem.

The higher education system in Malaysia is made international-friendly. The universities adopt international teaching practices that involve comprehension, application, and development skills rather than rote learning. Group discussions, paper presentations, assignments related to research, and industry-based projects are common practices of this mode of education. This will aptly suit Indian students who are eager to learn practical and international-standard thinking. As per news from educational institutions, Malaysia has updated its curriculum according to international standards and is continually updating its curriculum.

There are other important factors associated with providing students with a comfortable environment in Malaysia; namely the multicultural atmosphere. As an example, Indian students can enjoy similar dishes in Malaysia, celebrate festivals along with fellow Indian students and meet other students from different backgrounds which provides valuable insight and exposure to other cultures. In addition to providing Indian students with the ability to participate in the local community; they are also able to communicate in English with other students from around the world which makes Malaysia a perfect location for those students wishing to study abroad in English.

The country has gained popularity too due to its international education system that is not complicated at all. The universities here engage in partnerships with institutions from the UK, Australia, as well as the European region, such that students are offered degrees that are acceptable worldwide. Over the years, these partnerships have increased due to the rise of Malaysia as an education hub too. Students who graduate from Malaysia end up with degrees that are acceptable on an international level.

Being a student in Malaysia as a lifestyle appears to be well-rounded and structured. There is a great emphasis by universities on the well-being of students. Offices for international students help in orientation programs, academic as well as personal issues of the students. It is clear from recent trends that universities are giving greater importance to employment assistance through internship programs and career-based modules. This is helpful for Indian students who look for a direct connection of education with employment opportunities in overseas education for Indians.

Another reason why students are drawn to the country is the simpler admission system. The terms are well stated, and the entire process is transparent. The international education standards are well understood, and the students are treated on a level playing field. This helps to instill confidence in the students, as well as the parents, which is why, overall, it can be seen that it is a safe bet compared to other options out there, a reason why it is preferred in the Malaysian context.

Malaysia emerges as a rare gem for Indian students seeking quality education and cultural familiarity on one hand and international experience on the other. Malaysia allows students to study in English and be easily exposed to overseas living. In doing so, students also get global recognition for educational qualifications that lie closer to home.
